Week ending December 6, 2024

Last week, U.S. equities continued their recent bullish momentum, with the S&P 500 and Nasdaq both reaching new all-time highs. Economic data supported this positive trend, with the U.S. labor market showing resilience as nonfarm payrolls exceeded expectations, adding 227,000 jobs. The unemployment rate ticked up slightly to 4.2% but remains below long-term averages. Additionally, the ISM manufacturing and services PMI indicated expansion, suggesting ongoing economic growth. The Atlanta Fed's GDPNow model was revised higher to 3.3%, reflecting strong economic data. Despite potential for policy uncertainties from the next regime and market volatility, the overall economic backdrop remains strong, providing opportunities for investors.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- U.S. Treasury yields continued their recent downturn, as rates fell across the entirety of the yield curve. Short-term rates fell by a larger magnitude as all rates 1-year and shorter fell between 8 and 19 basis points while longer-term rates only fell between 1 and 5 bps.
- Expectations for a potential rate cut at the upcoming Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting increased, driven by the latest Nonfarm Payrolls report.
- This week, mortgage rates fell to their lowest point in over a month. Even though the decrease in rates was slight, it had a noticeable impact on consumer behavior with purchase demand improving.

Equity Markets Overview

- US equities largely continued their recent climb higher as the S&P 500 rose almost 1% and the Nasdaq rising almost 3.4% last week. However, the Dow Jones stalled out a bit posting a modest weekly loss of -0.5%.
- While the S&P did post a small gain for the week, eight of the eleven sectors posted a loss. Energy, Utilities, and Materials were the biggest losers falling -4.6%, -3.8%, and -3%, respectively. The only winners were Technology, Telecommunications, and Consumer Discretionary which rose 3.4%, 4.1%, and 5.9%, respectively, helping to drag the whole market forward.
- From a size perspective, large cap stocks posted a 1% gain for the week while mid- and small-cap lost -1% and -1.4%, respectively. From a style perspective, growth outperformed value in the large- and mid-cap segments while the inverse was true with small-caps.

Alternative Markets Overview

- Oil prices fell for the week as analysts projected a supply surplus next year on weak demand despite an OPEC+ decision to delay output hikes and extend deep production cuts to the end of 2026.
- Gold prices continued their recent skid as they fell -0.8% last week, continuing its post-election sell-off. A potential tailwind for demand and gold prices emerged as China's central bank, the largest buyer of gold in 2023, resumed purchasing gold for its reserves in November after a six-month pause.
- Bitcoin broke through the $100k price level last week setting a new milestone for the cryptocurrency. This resulted in weekly gains of 4.3% and its YTD performance climbing to a huge 138.8% gain.
